1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to an electromagnetic clutch, and more particularly to an electromagnetic clutch for an automatic transmission equipped with a torque converter.

2. Description of the Prior Art A conventional electromagnetic clutch includes a first core, a second core, a permanent magnet and a cylindrical sleeve. The first and second cores are disposed concentrically and coaxially with each other to provide an annular cavity between the cores. The permanent magnet is disposed within the annular cavity to magnetize the first core and the second core so as to cooperate with each other by means of the magnetic flux generated thereby to provide a clutch. A viscous fluid is received in the annular cavity to provide a hydraulic chamber between the first core and the second core. The cylindrical sleeve is disposed concentrically and coaxially with the first and second cores and receives an applied force to maintain the clutch in operation. The applied force is generated by the viscous fluid in the hydraulic chamber. In a conventional electromagnetic clutch as described above, the provision of the hydraulic chamber increases the working strokes of the cores to provide a wide operation range of the clutch. Since the hydraulic chamber is disposed radially inward of the magnetic flux between the cores, the hydraulic chamber must be sufficiently formed to receive the necessary fluid pressure. Accordingly, a base portion of the clutch is necessarily large to obtain the hydraulic chamber with the necessary capacity. In other words, a space of the base portion of the clutch becomes large to obtain a large capacity of the hydraulic chamber. The large clutch produces a f678ea9f9e
