When it comes to teaching people about the perils of the world they were born into, reddit is a treasure trove. In fact, I can't think of a better way to briefly describe just how awful this world can be than through a few example subreddits. The two most popular subreddits with over 100k subscribers are r/rape and r/murder. These subreddits have been around long enough that they have accumulated tens of thousands of posts describing various sexual and violent crimes from multiple countries all over the world. While these are always heartbreaking stories for those reading them, they also provide some insight as to where crime is prevalent in our society today. Because of what these forums have to offer, they can be very useful in examining the causes of crime, especially sexual crime. By combining this analysis with relevant statistics from the FBI, we can craft a hypothesis that encompasses most aspects of sexual and violent crimes. In order to test our hypothesis, I decided to compare what I found from analyzing all my detailed data with what is being taught in public schools and universities today. My hypothesis was that there were certain key concepts and theories missing from the public education system which led me to make a few discoveries: Click here for full size poster \(8x11 inches\) for printing. This is a great way to visually represent your results. Instead of a single poster, I recommend printing this poster and attaching it to a wall in your home. This will allow you to see how the data compares week-to-week, month-to-month and year-to-year. Thus, I decided to create a 20x30" poster that provided an overview of the pertinent facts that I found from my research. In addition, I included statistics from the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting Program for perpetrators of rape and murder from 1993 through 2013. While the FBI stats are extremely useful when looking at all murders in America, they will not be discussed here. These are only relevant because the data I collected focused on sexual homicides. If you would like to examine these data in greater detail, please click here for download link. Because this poster focuses on the distinctive nature of sexual crimes in America, I divided up each category between different species of animal. This way it is easier to see which species are most prevalent in these categories across all states in America. You can click here for download link or print out a copy yourself. The most comprehensive way to analyze cases of crime is through a combination of statistics drawn from computer databases and actual case reports. The most comprehensive databases are the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting Program and the National Crime Information Center. When it comes to computer databases, I chose to use the FBI's entire library of criminal history records. This allowed me to identify every single instance of sexual crime in America over a 20-year period. To make sure that no false positives or negatives were found, I used extremely rigorous techniques to eliminate any cases that looked suspiciously like computer errors or frauds.
